

partnership and collaboration within a more structured framework, where we can measure progress and outcomes on a regular basis. Whilst progress in this area has slowed down due to each partner being focussed on managing the immediacy of COVID 19, there have been some important developments.

UC Business School academics, Professor Jędrzej Białkowski and Dr Moritz Wagner have partnered with t

AI to successfully engage and support students throughout the student life cycle from early enquiries through to graduation.

Julie and Kaylene noted the value of travelling with officials from the Ministry of Education, TEC and members of other tertiary institutions who are also actively pursuing improved equity and student outcomes.

UC already has in place several initiatives to create greater access and exposure to UC. Three of those programmes have progressed in the last month. First, the UC STAR Programme, for year 12 and 13 high school students, has had a great start to the year with over 420 students enrolling for courses thus far. The courses, delivered both face to face and online engage students both locally and nationally across 103 different high schools. T719c3
